360 Degree Feedback Best Practices and the Army's MSAF Program

James M. Fiscus 2011 Development of leaders in the U.S. Army is absolutely paramount to its future success. The Army must leverage every opportunity available to enhance leader development. The Army's Field Manual 6-22, Leadership, stresses part of leader development encompasses the ability of a leader to become self-aware. Self-aware leaders are open and seek feedback from a variety of sources. Self awareness is certainly relevant in the present and future operating environments. Numerous leaders have effectively utilized multisource assessment and feedback approaches to gain insight, which may not otherwise be apparent, on how they are perceived by their subordinates, peers and superiors. This paper examines if Army policy and the implementation of its current multisource feedback systems leverage and reflect the best practices found in corporate America. It compares Army policy with best practices and also examines if the Army should utilize multisource feedback for consideration in their centralized selection board process.

RES-360 Degrees - Resilience in Education Systems Weltbank 2013 This manual presents the objectives and procedures for application of the Education Resilience Approaches (ERA) Program's first major tool to aid in assessing resilience in education systems. The RES-360 rapid assessment approach helps both national education institutions (e.g. Ministries of Education) and schools to identify the risks confronting education communities, especially students. It also points to the assets and positive engagement in schools and communities that, if recognized and supported, can make national education programs more relevant and effective in contexts of adversity. In addition to the RES-360 evaluation, ERA is developing tools to assess classroom and school opportunities to foster resilience (RES-School) and a mixed-methods research approach for local researchers and higher education institutions to guide their contributions to education resilience evidence in their countries (RES-Research). As the application of these diagnostic and research tools expands, ERA hopes to systematically collect and disseminate the growing global evidence regarding the resilience of education systems in contexts of adversity and their contributions to mitigating the sources of such adversity.

Choosing 360: A Guide to Evaluating Multi-rater Feedback Instruments for Management Development

Ellen Van Velsor 1997-06-01 Feedback is a rare commodity in organizational life, but it is key to managerial effectiveness. One increasingly popular vehicle for getting feedback from one's boss, peers, and subordinates is the multiple-perspective, or 360-degree, feedback instrument. Use of such an instrument can enhance self-confidence by highlighting individual strengths and can facilitate greater self-awareness by pointing out areas in need of further development. Because of the availability of so many feedback instruments, finding the best instruments for an organization's needs is difficult. This book presents a step-by-step process that shows how to evaluate multiple-feedback instruments intended for management development. The steps take you through such issues as instrument development, validity and reliability, feedback display, scoring strategies, and cost.

Guide to Psychological Assessment with Hispanics Lorraine T. Benuto 2012-09-19 This book focuses on diversity, culture, and ethnicity as they relate to psychological assessment of Hispanics. It is a how-to guide for clinicians, researchers, and instructors working with Hispanic clients. Each chapter contains an overview of cultural considerations needed for assessing the Hispanic client followed by a specific exploration of the assessment measures available and the research that has been conducted on these measures with Hispanic participants. An exploration of the strengths and limitations of each assessment measure is included. Considering that ethnocultural minority individuals who are of Hispanic/Latino origin make up the largest ethnocultural minority group in the United States, guidelines for working with this population are a must. Given that a large subset of this percentage is composed of immigrants many of whom do not speak English or who have learned English as a second language, special considerations for effective psychological assessment are necessary. This book fills a gap in the scientific literature by consolidating the research on psychological assessment with Hispanic samples into one comprehensive volume and providing simple recommendations for the psychological assessment of Hispanic clients. An exploration of the general psychological assessment domains (e.g., personality, intelligence) is included with references to research on the major assessment measures used in the field. A more specific exploration of psychodiagnostic assessment measures follows, including the assessment of mood disorders, anxiety disorders, sexual dysfunction, psychosis, etc. Several chapters are dedicated to specialized assessment, including neuropsychological assessment, forensic assessment, and school-based assessment, overall creating the most comprehensive, up-to-date, research-based compendium of psychological assessment measures for use with Hispanic clients.
