This, however, is just what many novices think they can do in reference to matrimony. They fancy that it has a magic power of conferring happiness almost in spite of themselves, and are quite surprised when experience teaches them that domestic felicity, like everything else worth having, must be worked for - must be earned by patient endurance, self-restraint, and loving consideration for the tastes, and even for the faults, of him or her with whom life is to be lived. How to Be Happy Though Married (Classic Reprint) Madison C. Peters 2017-07-19 Excerpt from How to Be Happy Though Married There was published some years ago an English book by a Graduate of the University of Matrimony, bearing the alarmingly suggestive title How to be Happy Though Married, a headliner not original with the author. An old English preacher named Skelton, first used it as a title for a sermon. The startling theme inculcates the important and frequently forgotten truth that domestic happiness does not come as a matter of course, but like everything else worth having, has to be worked for. The passages published in this booklet are picked at random from the author's lecture on the subject and are intended to advertise that lecture, which in its entirety would make quite a book. Lecture committees will find this subject one which will attract attention, and the complete lecture as given before popular audiences furnishes refined entertainment, while doing a vast amount of good. How to be Happy Though Married: Being a Handbook to Marriage E. J. Hardy 2019-11-26

How to be Happy Though Married by E. J. Hardy is a guidebook for just marrieds on how to have a thriving marriage, with quotations and stories from distinguished persons during the late 19th century. Excerpt: "To men of a shy and more nervous temperament, to be married without chloroform is a very painful operation. They find it difficult to screw their courage to the marrying place. On one occasion a bridegroom so far forgot what was due to himself and his bride as to render himself unfit to take the vows through too frequent recourse on the wedding morn to the cup that cheers—and inebriates. The minister was obliged to refuse to proceed with the marriage. A few days later, the same thing occurred with the same couple; whereupon the minister gravely remonstrated with the bride, and said they must not again present themselves with the bridegroom in such a state. "But, sir, he—he winna come when he's sober," was the candid rejoinder. It is possible that this bridegroom, whose courage was so very Dutch, might have been deterred by the impending fuss and publicity of a marriage ceremony, rather than by any fear of or want of affection for her who was to become his wife. Even in the best assorted marriages there is always more or less anxiety felt upon the wedding-day."
